Abstract	The case study, Fube district in Usa City, Oita Prefecture, is a rural area experiencing population decline. In this district, residents acted as acquaintances without any social gatherings, and so resident interaction gradually weakened. Usa City, the Fube District Urban Planning Council, and the Sasaki Laboratory worked together to hold resident interaction events, mainly throughout fiscal year 2022. The implementation of this program deepened interactions between elderly women, who were drawn in by them to interact with elderly men, and it was found that participants were concerned about "permanent memorial services" as a future concern, and it was stated that municipal functions are required to set up consultation desks, including online ones.
