Abstract	This study aims to explore the effects of community-based childcare support programs by conducting a survey targeting local parents, high school students, and junior college students who participate in such programs. The results indicate that participating parents expressed a high level of satisfaction with the program. Moreover, the events were also well-received by both junior college and high school students. Furthermore, high school students who participated in the events demonstrated an increased interest in community activities, as well as a heightened awareness of childcare training and nutritionist training.
