Abstract	This paper provides an overview of the views on intellectual disabilities and on teaching by contrasting the descriptions in the 1966 and 1971 edition of the explanatory book on the Courses of Study for Schools for the Handicapped with those in the current edition of the explanatory book on the Courses of Study for Special Needs Schools. Based on this, the issues and directions of education for the intellectual disabilities in the future are discussed. While there is a consistent commonality in the view of intellectual disabilities, there are certain changes in the views on teaching.
