Abstract	Currently, Japanese society is facing two needs: to develop inclusive communities and to work on sustainable development goals, as determined by the United Nations, to counter global issues. This study examined the discussion linking these needs, considering the perspectives and conditions they share. The shared perspectives include the creation of a sustainable society and a society where people can live at ease. Social inclusion and the guarantee of basic human rights are fundamental to both. The following three shared conditions were identified: (1) the use of platforms, (2) the creation of partnerships, and (3) the establishment of the PDCA cycle and governance. Furthermore, these conditions do not arise spontaneously; rather, administrative initiative is required to create them.
