Abstract	This study is one of the initiatives based on the comprehensive collaboration between Nishikyushu University Junior College and Nagasaki Junior College. It involves a compilation of a series of lectures given by faculty members specializing in Human and Social Studies at Nagasaki Junior College, targeted at second-year students of the Care Welfare Course at Nishikyushu University Junior College, focusing on preparing for the Certified Care Worker National Examination. As a result, many students found the lectures to be beneficial, and the overall effectiveness of the course received generally positive evaluations. However, the results also highlighted several areas for future consideration, such as increasing the number of lectures, implementing them earlier, and the preference for conducting them face-to-face.
