Abstract	The purpose of this study is to clarify the structure of difficulties in the lives of people who are withdrawn in their middle and older age groups. An attempt will be made to visualize life difficulties based on the viewpoints of consumers. As a research method, a semi-structured interview survey was conducted with eight social workers. Certain personal and institutional requirements were set for the selection of the research subjects. The narratives of 15 cases of middle-aged and older social withdrawal provided by these social workers were transcribed verbatim and analyzed qualitatively (qualitatively). The analysis generated 41 codes, 18 categories, and 5 core categories. The results showed that the structure of difficulties in the lives of middle-aged and older social withdrawal cases is characterized by "inner vulnerability that is difficult to see" and "vulnerability of the ability to make a living," which are factors of the individual, and suggested the influence of "closed family communication," "in-betweenness in the community," and "barrier to general employment" which are environmental factors.
