Abstract	On and around National Long-Term Care Day on November 11 every year, various campaigns have been implemented in each prefecture nationwide to improve public awareness about nursing care. Despite this being an opportunity for awareness raising, the Long-Term Care Day had not been fully utilized until now. This time, as a part of activities for National Long-term Care Day, three care-worker training facilities in Saga Prefecture worked together to hold a "Nursing Care Photo/Senryu Poetry/Composition Contest," mainly for students of local high schools with a nursing care course. A total of 492 works were submitted to the contest, reflecting mainly values such as "I enjoy performing nursing care" and "I will help people," suggesting that students have wanted to become a care worker with these purposes in mind. To prevent students from excluding care work as a career choice merely because of a negative impression that the job is dirty, dangerous and demeaning (the 3Ds), it is necessary to keep sending the message about the attractiveness of nursing care to society, and training facilities should cooperate to conduct awareness-raising campaigns.
