Abstract	In this study, we conducted a survey for the purpose of clarifying the actual conditions of evaluations, goals, and means used by occupational therapy students in evaluation training. The three main survey contents were the evaluation conducted on one patient in charge, the set goals (short-term and long-term goals), and the means used. As a result, regarding evaluation, goals, and means, the top three student responses were generally in the top ten of the occupational therapy white paper, and none of them showed a significant difference from the white paper results. It was considered that the students were considering their own evaluations, goals, and means using the occupational therapy of the training instructor as a model.
