Abstract	At our university, “children’s museum,” the community childcare support activity, was implemented in 2009 and currently entered its ninth year. In 2016, it was held 12 times per year and a total of 146 households (389 people) participated. Satisfaction rates of participations in the activity showed that 46% were “satisfied” and 44% were “very satisfied.” It became clear that most parents who participated in the activity wanted to participate on subsequent occasions. This also suggests that such an activity is steadily taking root in the community as a place for parenting support. With an overview of “children’s museum,” this paper reflects on its 2016 activity and describes the direction of its future activity as well as challenges associated with it.
