Abstract	In order to clarify the reasons of school attendance among high school students by department, grade, and school avoidance status, a questionnaire survey was conducted on reasons for school attendance and school avoidance status among 938 first- to third-year high school students in regular or professional courses. Factor analysis revealed three factors, "school attractiveness," "careers/condign," and "external pressure," with differences in each factor by department, grade, and school avoidance status. By clarifying the reasons for school attendance, support for motivating students to go to school can be considered, which may lead to the prevention of school non-attendance.
keyword	highschool student, school attendance, motivational support
