Abstract	In the 10th issue of the Journal of Children's Studies, the author elucidated the importance of keeping records and making evaluations in childcare. Childcare workers and facilities need to reflect on the childcare they provide from the two perspectives of how children are raised and optimal childcare and make evaluations based on their records. With this point in mind, the author has been providing practical training on a method of recording observations that promotes teachers' understanding of the children in their class. This paper will further examine and verify the results of ongoing research with regard to the result of the training.
