Abstract	The purpose of this study was to clarify children and child-rearing support needs in Western Kyushu in view of children's overall life. To achieve this, interviews were conducted with three staff members from local children support organizations. In a qualitative analysis of survey results, the two main categories of Social and Community Issues (Systems and Services) and Children's and Parents Needs were formed. Social and Community Issues were divided into the following seven categories: social disadvantages felt due to child-rearing, lack of public services in children's support, community characteristics, linkage between children and their families and the community, linkage with public services during parenting, role of and issues with schools, and children's education. Children's and Parents' Needs were divided into the following seven categories: children's environment, children-parents conflict, food issues at home, difficulties felt in parenting, children in need of special support, improvement of children's lifestyles, and adults' understanding towards children. In the future, it will be necessary to respond to these children and child-rearing support needs.
