Abstract	The Japanese populace are dealing firmly with the Corona pandemic and effectively controlling it through the blockage of national and international travel; and effective advertisement of avoiding public places which are owned by both the government and private sector. The acceptance of international students is recognized as an important factor leading to economic growth in each country, and strategies are needed to compete for human resources. This study examines the international mobility of students to date and provides a theoretical framework for the post-pandemic era.
keyword	higher education, international migration of human resources, international students, after covid, international exchange
