Abstract	This study presents two school counselling process regarding a mother of a male junior high school student with delinquent tendencies. In the first phase, a change was observed in the mother's attitude towards their son, marked by more receptive attitudes. In the second phase, the sons had feelings of re-approach toward their mother. Although he repeatedly engaged in problematic behaviors, such as smoking, drinking, midnight-walking, fist-fighting, and disturbing classes, they maintained their ties with their mother. In phase three (the son's individuation), their ego-inflation gradually decreased, and they entered senior high school not as part of their mother but as a separate individual. Three points were considered in the Discussion section: (1) the mother's interactions with her son at home, (2) the paternal and maternal principles in the counseling-observation of two principles, and (3) the issue of mother counselling with her a male junior high school student in the school counselling, ① the consultation within the school, ② the collaboration of mother counselling regarding the teachers.
