Abstract	With the internationalization of the nursing workforce and growing acceptance of international students at care worker training facilities in Japan, this paper reports on an overseas study trip conducted to help Japanese students who are aiming to become care workers to build a foundation to learn with foreign students and smoothly collaborate with peers from overseas, through being exposed to different cultures and values. The report outlines the overview, programs, and results of the training (pre-training, training content, and reporting session), and lists six achievements of the training: (1) learning nursing care in Asia, (2) learning intercultural communication, (3) understanding different lives by experiencing Korean history and culture, (4) developing one's own perception of caring, (5) learning Korean methods and skills regarding nursing care that are useful for the advancement of nursing care in Japan, and (6) developing more international perspectives. In addition, consideration was given to prospects for overseas training programs and the development of nursing care education from an international viewpoint. The results also highlighted the necessity to develop a more distinctive educational program.
