Abstract	The childcare support activity “Children's Museum” aims to support childcare and child growth in communities and has been continuously conducting activities since 2009. In this study, we attempt to analyze and study parents who participated in the activities from the viewpoint of “support for parents” based on descriptive content from a survey on the kinds of experiences these activities led to. The results suggest that participation in the activities leads to experiences such as “awareness/discovery of childcare/child growth,” “growth of relationships and play,” “refreshing for parents themselves,” and it seems these activities fulfill the role/function of “support for parents.”
